

Dear Hunt Military Community,

What being a patriot means to me is to have family that come from different countries and still be able to be welcomed in the U.S. Being able to still be a U.S. citizen no matter my background feels like being respected and supported and that's why I feel like we should support and respect our country. I also think it means for me is to put my trust into them and in return they will give me their trust and I think it is one a many good benefits of being a patriot which I love. Though I may not really celebrate I still love to have fun and help support my community by building trust within others because what would our country become without our trust. In conclusion being a patriot is within the matter of trust, loyalty, and loving support in us all. We help each other through the thick and thin and we may not be perfect, but we are better together, so this concludes this summary. Thank you for your time.

Sincerely, Ava, 13
